

Democracy needs a diverse communications landscape to work. Regarding media ownership, it seems to me that current ownership restrictions prevent a few, large companies from controlling what people read, hear and watch. It is important to safeguard that a single company cannot own a broadcast station and newspaper in the same market, and that a company cannot reach more than 35% of the TV households in the country. Take steps to control Rupert Murdoch from having so much control of the airwaves as well.
